No. 57-Queen Anne Furniture

The furniture of the types made in the early part of the eighteenth censhorter name, however, is the term called wins the game. usually applied, and in general covers the furniture styles in vogue till about 1735 or 1740. Although Queen Anne died in 1714, there was no very marked change in style until well on toward the middle of the century.

Furniture of this period is distinguished by the prevalence of curving lines in its design and is called "curvilinear," as opposed to the 'rectilinear" or straight-line types of furniture of earlier and later dates. The 'cyma curve," shown in "A" of the illustration, was everywhere conspicuous as the basis of design. Two cyma curves, placed as in "B," formed the design of chair-backs, or gave the shape for the tops of mirrors or the heads of panels as in "E" and "F"; a single cyma curve supplied the motif for the cabriole legs of chairs, tables and highboys: two cyma curves, placed as in "C," formed the scroll top found on highboys, secretaries and cupboards; while two cyma curves, placed as in "D." formed the outline commonly given to the skirting or aprons of highboys, lowboys, tables and other pieces. The wood most commonly used was walnut.

The teams line up in two single files from six to ten yards away from the bell. The front team players toss up for first ball. The leader hands the ball to the winner of the toss-up (say, the first of the Dinner Bells), who stands on a pitching base two feet in front of the teams in a straight line from the hooped bell. At the leader's signal "Ringo!" the player throws the ball, aiming to hit the bell. If the bell rings he scores one point for his team., and then goes to the end of the file of Dinner Bells, the others moving up one pace.

Then the first in the file of Fire Bells goes to base, and at the signal "Ringo!" he pitches, scoring one if the ball rings the bell. No score is made unless the bell rings. After the game opens the leader should stand near the bell-post to keep score, to recover the ball and to pitch it to the tury is called "Queen Anne" or player whose turns come next.
